ROOSEVELT'S PATRIOTISM

FUNDAMENTALLY, as the world now is, promiscuity in patriotism is as unwholesome as promiscuity in domestic relations. The best world-citizen is the man who is first and foremost a good citizen of his own country. Within our national limits I distrust any man who is as fond of a stranger as he is of his own family; and in international matters I even more keenly distrust the man who cares for other nations as much as for his own. I do not trust persons whose affections are so diffuse. There are men who look upon their wives or mothers or countries, and upon other women and other countries, with the same tepid equality of emotion. I do not regard these men as noble or broad-minded. I regard them as rotten.

This great war has offered the supreme test of the only kind of internationalism worth talking about, the internationalism which implies power and courage and disinterested willingness to sacrifice much in order to put down international wrong and establish international right. When the emergency test was thus applied the professional internationalists showed themselves a sorry crew. The really powerful men of intrigue and action who professed to the doctrine have been the efficient and evil tools of German autocracy, militarism and international tyranny. The milk and water intellectuals who prattled about the doctrine have been the timid and inefficient tools of the same foul masters.

PAID PATRIOTISM

Let us persecute no man because he bears a German name, if his heart is in the right place, but let us keep a vigilant eye for those who were pro-German before April 6, 1917, but who have been able to get on the political pay roll and are now exhibiting their special brand of paid patriotism. The real patriots of America are not born of expediency and political preference. . . .
